READ NOW

In a world where digital perfection reigns supreme, Buhlebenkosi Mongezi Jafta born and raised in Kokstad stands firm in his truth: authenticity above all else. For Buhlebenkosi, raw authenticity means never letting go of who he is at the core. It's a lesson hard-earned in an industry that thrives on trends and image. "Being inspired is good," he shares, "but it's so easy to get intimidated when you're new."

You end up taking on things that are out of character because they seem to work for others." Yet, he returns to this powerful reminder people support him for who he truly is. That self-awareness grounds him, even as the creative space constantly evolves.

BUHLE

HIS STORY

His storytelling is shaped by his personal journey—from dropping out of university to navigating his modeling career and embracing simple joys like trying a new restaurant. For Buhlebenkosi, the heart of a good story lies in the everyday lessons, not just big milestones. He wants his audience to see themselves in his journey, even if the paths they walk differ. Success, in his eyes, isn't about numbers. It's about resonance. "If I am relatable, then the project is a success." Through this journey, one thing stands out: being seen and affirmed. "This feels affirming. It's showing me that there is an interest and that I am on the right track. It motivates me to keep going."

There are creators, and then there are curators of magic & Storytelling . Meet Arrol Mthembu (Ogee) — the visionary behind the Instagram gallery @ogee_ar, a name that reverberates with meaning and mystique. "I am Ogee," he proclaim, "a curator of beautiful things, where fashion becomes art, and creativity knows no bounds." But Arrol is more than a stylist. He's a boundless muse, a vessel of transformation, and a soul translator who turns fabric into feeling. Through carefully sculpted looks and deep emotional resonance, Ogee brings forward a radical truth: fashion is more than aesthetics — it is poetry, emotion, and the architecture of identity

To Ogee, beauty isn't polished or predictable. "Beauty in fashion is not perfection : it's resonance," He says. It's found in the swish of a skirt that mirrors a memory, or the collision of vintage silhouettes with futuristic dreams. His process begins with a whisper of soul : an unspoken feeling, a vivid mood that blooms quietly within. From this seed, styling grows like storytelling, shaping a narrative that speaks without saying a word. Each look is more than fabric and thread, it's a stanza in an ongoing poem. Ogee treats fashion as visual poetry, using texture, silhouette, and color like verbs, punctuation, and rhythm. The result? Ensembles that don't just impress; he speak, he linger, he transform.

THE CREATIVE VISION GUIDED BY FAITH AND FASHION

In a world where originality is often overshadowed by trends, few creatives stand out for their authenticity and divine sense of purpose. One of them is Maredi Thupana, better known on social media as 2pana_ — a name born from his surname, Thupana, meaning a thin stick used to whip. “It might historically suggest a connection to someone known for their strength,” he explains. The ‘2’ in his handle came from a family twist. “I got the idea from my brother who had similarly played around with the number two in his username.”

FASHION AS A NARRATIVE:
THE ART OF FASHION

In the buzzing streets of Middelburg, where weekend markets brim with colour and pavements often double as runways, a young creative discovered the art of making clothes talk. For Jay Njabulow, fashion is more than fabric — it's language, storytelling, and a celebration of identity.

Jay's love affair with style began early, inspired by the bold street looks, vintage gems, and raw creativity of everyday people. What started as mixing and matching outfits for fun became a medium for self-expression and confidence. Whether curating photoshoots or styling friends, Jay realised fashion was about more than looking good — it was about communicating culture, mood, and individuality without uttering a word.

SKY WALKER FROM EKASI TO THE WORLD

The Birth of a Creative Force

From the heart of the East Rand, a new voice in fashion and art has emerged. That voice is Philani Khoza, better known as Sky Walker. He's not just a name on a runway or an Instagram handle to follow; he's a movement. With every step he takes and every image he shares, Sky Walker uplifts a vision rooted deeply in eKasi, yet universal in its creative power. "Hood Works," he often says. And in his case, the hood is working wonders.

Growing Up in the East Rand

Sky Walker's journey began not on a red carpet or under the flash of runway lights, but in the vibrant, rhythm-filled streets of the East Rand. His earliest inspirations came from his environment: music, dance, and the visual arts provided a creative refuge and a world of imagination. "Growing up, I was always drawn to creative expression," he recalls. "I found solace in it."

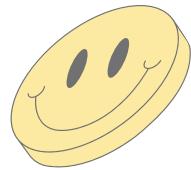

East Rand wasn't just home; it was and still is, the foundation of his artistic identity. "The culture, the colors, the people, it all shaped me," Sky Walker says. From thrift store treasures his mother used to find, to the bursts of street-style fashion on every corner, the local scene continues to drive his creative output.

MONDAYS MAG PUBLICATIONS

At just twenty years old, Mpho Lekhoebla known online as @mpho.ix has grown into one of the most promising young creators in South Africa's digital scene. In less than a year, he has managed to carve out a unique lane in both modelling and content creation, gaining traction on TikTok and Instagram without the backing of management, agencies, or viral gimmicks.

"I honestly didn't see this coming," Mpho says with a laugh. "I would say that not conforming to specific niches is what put me in a position to grow so quickly. I'm just content with doing what I love, which could be different next week than it is today and that's part of the fun."

MOSTVIEW STORY

It all started unexpectedly during a family holiday. “I was in Durban on holiday last December,” he recalls. “My sister, Refilwe, thought it would be cool to use her camera to fool around and see what could happen. Looking at those pictures made me realise, ‘Hold on, I don’t look half bad in these.’ That’s when I decided to look into modelling and from there, I adopted content creation.”

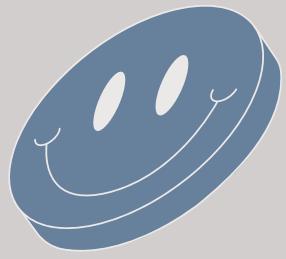

What began as a playful experiment quickly turned into purpose. Mpho describes it as an ‘about time’ moment: “I’ve always been told that with a personality such as mine, I should’ve been in the creation space a long time ago, but I didn’t see what others saw until now.”

Balancing Two Worlds

Mpho’s life now exists at the intersection of technology and creativity. As an IT student, he spends much of his week in lectures, but he’s also juggling content shoots, brand collaborations, and promotional work. “Balancing varsity with content creation and modelling hasn’t been easy at all,” he admits. “There have been times where I’ve had to attend modelling meetings that clashed with my lectures or film TikToks while dealing with creative blocks.”
